Hon'ble Vice Chancellor's Message

Since time immemorial, Indian traditional medicinal system has proclaimed 'food as the best medicine' and millet crops were often revered and recommended for operationalizing this maxim. Millets continue to hold sway even today as they have great potential in contributing substantially to food and nutritional security of the country and thus, they are not only a powerhouse of nutrients but also are climate resilient crops as well. In general, millets are categorized as under-utilized crops, despite having great nutritional significance. They usually possess high nutrient content comprising protein, essential fatty acids, dietary fibre, B-vitamins and minerals such as calcium, iron, zinc, potassium and magnesium. Besides, they also render various health benefits such as regulating blood pressure and managing thyroid, cardiovascular and celiac diseases alike. Recent research findings also show that millets contain high anti-diabetic properties and millet-based foods have low Glycemic Index (GI) and are high in dietary fibre and antioxidants by the virtue of which they can reduce the postprandial blood glucose level and glycosylated hemoglobin. Moreover, pseudo-cereals like buckwheat have beneficial nutraceutical properties and their gluten-free nature can play an important role in preventing celiac problem and their flour is more rich in lysine, iron, magnesium and copper when compared to wheat flour. According to the Indian Council of Medical Research, when compared to rice, foxtail millet has 81 per cent more protein; whereas little millet has 840 per cent higher fat; 350 per cent higher fibre and 1,229 per cent higher iron. Thereby, it is no coincidence that there has been a long cherished demand to declare millet crops as "Nutri-Cereals" by Dr. Swaminathan, father of green revolution in order to boost their demand in national and international markets and allow farmers to get higher incomes.

Though millets can be used as functional food substitutes in many of the food preparations of everyday Indian cuisine, most of the consumers (especially urban) are not aware of the great advantages that these items can provide and hence fail to use them properly. The Government of India has taken various measures to address this gap. The first and foremost measure is that of the Ministry of Agriculture and Farmers' Welfare which has declared millets as nutri-cereals, thereby, fulfilling the long-standing demand of the millet industry. Secondly, the Food Safety and Standards Authority of India (FSSAI) has issued draft notifications prescribing revised comprehensive standards for addressing the issues of quality and purity of millet products. Thirdly, and most importantly, the Central Government has accepted the recommendation of including millet products under Public Distribution System (PDS). Thereby, paving way to the increased scope both in terms of production and marketing of all the major millet crops in India such as sorghum (jowar), pearl millet (bajra), finger millet (ragi/mandua) and minor millets viz. foxtail millet (kangani/kakun), proso millet (cheena), kodo millet (kodo), barnyard millet (sawa/sanwa/jhangora), little millet (kutki) along with two pseudo millets (black-wheat (kuttu) and amaranthus (chaulai).

2018 - National Year of Millets

I appreciate and welcome this historic decision of the Indian government for providing special status to millets as 'nutri-cereals' and for bringing them under PDS.
